Republican Announces Candidacy for Travis County District Attorney

On Monday, December 9, 2019, Martin Harry, an Austin attorney, announced his candidacy for Travis County District Attorney. Harry, seeking the Republican nomination, explained his decision to file, stating, "the Travis County District Attorney's office has come under attack with allegations of mismanagement and mass incarceration. Critics claim that incumbent Democrat District Attorney Margaret Moore has failed to properly prosecute sexual assault cases and further claim that she is complicit with Travis County Democrat judges in the mass incarceration of indigent persons.

According to Harry, "Democrat candidates opposing Moore are campaigning to discredit the criminal justice system, promote racial division and to divide our community into competing interest groups." Instead, he states, "we need a district attorney committed to building public confidence in the criminal justice system and uniting the community." Harry explained that his campaign aspires to "unify Republicans, Democrats and independents to support a District Attorney office committed to prosecuting criminals, preventing crime and protecting the interests of victims of crime."
